

Who Says You Have to be Nice: The art of honest communication within every relationship is a must read for those of us who believe we've been over-schooled in our expectations (of what others expect and what we expect) in return for doing nice. Some of the key issues explored within this book are: How to feel good about saying NO Understand some of the reasons why we feel compelled to do nice rather than be nice Reframe our relationship to conflict Examine the fear-based motivation behind our desire for being perceived as nice Turn difficult conversations into healthy dialogues What they are saying: "As a mediator, educator, activist, mother and life-partner I found every page of this book to be thought-provoking and valuable... a must-have tool on the path to effective communication."
