

Balm an Extendable List-Processing Language (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from Balm an Extendable List-Processing Language This paper describes an extendable list-processing system currently implemented on the CDC 6600 which includes the facilities provided by LISP 1.5, and permits the programmer to write in an Algol-like language. Additional data-types include vectors, strings, and entry-points. The language can be extended by adding new operators, and by specifying how expressions involving them should be translated into an intermediate language.
