

This brilliant book by Rabbi Dr. Zev Zahavy pursues a bold and dynamic theme that foresees the possibility that science and theology may harness their energies in a unified endeavor, and thereby assume a creative role of leadership in formulating a meaningful outlook for a bewildered, aimless society. A new power structure of science and theistic existentialism will direct humankind along sensible paths of behavior, particularly since civilization stands at a crossroads wherein the cosmological destiny of the human species appears to be at stake. The analysis of the cosmic drama is offered in two sections. First, through a studious essay by the world-renowned astronomer Professor Sir Bernard Lovell, who directed the famous Jodrell Bank Astronomy Laboratories in Cheshire, England, there is presented an explicit elucidation of the cosmological problem. This comprehensive survey is then subjected to a thought-provoking transitional examination by professor Zahavy, adding thereto an original, theistic existentialist exposition. In the first section, titled Whence, Professor Lovells essay In the Centre of Immensities calls to mind the sterling idealism of Thomas Carlyle. It is used as a springboard to consider such intriguing topics as: mans eternal quest; the birth of a star; the human menace to mankind; the origin and expanse of the known universe; mysterious quasars; zero radius at the beginning of time; and mans total involvement with the universe. In the second section of the book, Professor Zahavy proceeds to probe Professor Lovells masterful essay. He endeavors an inquiry beyond its scope of content. The second section, Wherefore, engages in a consideration of some aspects of science and theology; the paradox of modern science; the plight of the particular; the limitations of man and science; and the eight levels of human existence that offer an existentialist delineation of the human problem. About the Author Professor Zev Zahavy, Ph.D. (1918-2012) wrote extensively on philosophical topics, and he engaged in considerable research in the area of cosmology. He studied on the graduate level with leading American and British figures in the field of philosophy and religion. His variegated courses in the City University of New York ranged from a presentation of classical intellectual literature to an analysis of modern existentialism. He served as rabbi at congregations in midtown, New York City. His sermons on a wide range of topics were reported in over 200 New York Times articles.
