

The End of Sin: An Eschatological Odyssey Into Telormatia

There exists within the scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, a yet future experiential victory that is to be achieved through the work of Christ as his gospel continues to go forward and invade all peoples, nations, and languages. It will result in the Teloarmatia: the end of sin in its experiential existence, within the future history of the human race. This end of sin will not occur all at once. Rather, in light of the on-going progress of Christs cross work, sin as an on-going reality of mankind has been slowly but definitely losing its grip on humanity. Not all mankind, but amongst those who have been regenerated by the Spirit of God, thus enabling them to hear, receive and understand the Gospel of Christ. In other words, the termination of sin as a personal and anthropological experience will continue to slowly suffocate within mankind as the entire human race eventually and surely succumbs to the powerful absolute designs of God through the gospel.
