Do you know someone who is good at managing their emotions? Someone who is good at expressing their thoughts, hopes and even their most personal feelings in a clear and appropriate manner? Someone who is great at handling other peoples emotions, even during awkward situations? Someone who is a LIKEABLE LEADER type of person. If so, then this person is emotionally intelligent. If you are emotionally intelligent, you are the master of your own feelings. You know how to survive a bad mood without it ruining your day, and you know how to use your emotional energy wisely. Leadership: How to Make Difficult Co-workers Respect, Admire And Follow You

Are you facing a new role as a leader? If so, you probably know this feeling when you have to be something you are not sure you really are. What I mean is, if you havent done something before over a longer period of time, you cant really tell if you have what it takes. And of course, leaders face many challenges that other people dont. They have to manage people and guide them in ways that make them follow and respect them. However, many new leaders fail at this, even though it doesnt have to be the case. They dont have to experience the embarrassment of not being taken seriously or even made fun of by difficult co-workers. They don't have to spend their time and energy on people that envy them for their new role or deal with slander every day. Being a leader that is respected, admired and followed isn't as hard as many new leaders think. You already have the skills in you. You just have to become aware of them and cultivate them, step-by-step. And this book will show you exactly how.
