

Reflections

Angie was a girl made for the sixties with her swinging hair and long white boots. Everyone who met her said that she looked like a famous presenter from TV and she laughed and went along with their remarks but underneath her confident smile she was desperate to be loved and looked up to as her younger sister was. So desperate that she believed that all the boys and men in her young life wanted her to give them her all to prove that love forever. These were fast changing years and everyone was telling each other how much fun it all was but for Angie it was turned on its head and eventually came to a full stop as she was presented with the ultimate life changing decision and its consequences. This book is a true reflection of what it felt like to be a teenager in the Sixties, the pressure and the dreadful inhibitions that befell a young girl on making a mistake just to be accepted. Although the outcome is inevitable the guilt and hurt felt by Angie is never far away.
