

Even though there is a cover pic of a silly kid, this is a grown-up activity. I tried not to use the typical topics for these questions to ask yourself or others. You can do it alone, or in a group; with a small amount of time, or at great length. We all have questions about the unseen and undecided world. My mind was racing one day so I figured I should write my questions down, which led to more questions. Then I wrote down things that I thought would just be interesting to listen to in a discussion group. By thinking about or discussing your answers to all these, I hope to expand our total collective thought patterns or belief, or at least learn a little from each other. This is written in an informal manner, but the direction I am steering you in can become quite serious indeed. I'm interested to see if any previous ideas you had on each subject changed, became stronger, or totally got shot down. Each question relates to each person a little differently, so be ready to explain and sometimes defend your answers. Personal experiences and backgrounds will come into play, eventually revealing our willingness to work together. Explore the possibilities, and try not to get mad at your friends. FYI, it starts out a little mild in order to get you in the mood. Have fun!
