

Avery is running: from her past, from her friends and family, and from her memories. But she doesn't have a choice. It was her mother that made the decision to whisk her away from the only home she had ever known. It was her mother's idea to move to Canada after a terrible tragedy that shook their happy existence. She chose a place where they can be safe and at peace, a place where nothing bad ever happens. In her new city, they find a beautiful house in a great neighborhood next to a spacious, scenic park. They can't believe their luck at having found the perfect place on such short notice and the price was simply too good to pass up. When Avery starts to settle into her new surroundings she meets new friends and a guy that might just help her move on. She couldn't be happier that her mother made such a drastic change. There are no reminders of her past and she is adjusting faster than she ever thought she could. Life is perfect. Or is it? What Avery and her mother didn't realize is that running from one evil had only led them to another. After all, when something sounds too good to be true...it probably is.
